Hiking and Camping — Answer Key

Did you know?

- Fall hikers are often specifically chasing peak foliage, a short window when leaf color is at its most vivid before leaves begin to fall.
- Because daylight hours shrink quickly in autumn, experienced hikers plan trips to finish well before the genuinely earlier sunset.
- Layering clothing is a real, practical strategy for fall hikes, since morning cold and midday warmth can differ significantly on the same trail.
- Hypothermia is a real medical risk hikers can face even in relatively mild fall temperatures, especially if clothing gets wet from rain or sweat.
