Did you know?

- Penguins often leap out of the water while swimming in a behavior called porpoising, which may help them breathe and swim faster at the same time.
- Emperor penguin chicks huddle together in tight groups called creches for warmth while their parents are away searching for food.
- A penguin's dark back and white belly is a real camouflage pattern called countershading, making it harder for predators to spot from above or below.
- Not all penguin species live in extremely cold climates; some, like the Galápagos penguin, live much closer to the equator.
