Scarecrows — Answer Key

Did you know?

- Scarecrows have been used by farmers for thousands of years, with early versions recorded in ancient Egypt and Greece to protect grain fields from birds.
- A human-shaped figure built to represent someone or something is technically called an effigy, a broader term than "scarecrow" itself.
- Modern scarecrows are often more decorative than functional, since many farmers today rely on other methods, like netting or noise devices, to protect real crops.
- Some regions hold scarecrow-building festivals and contests each fall, turning the practical farm tool into a genuine community craft tradition.
